The Hastings Community

April, 1981

From the Dean

For most of us, the most significant event of the term was the tragic and untimely death of Wiley Manuel, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of California and member of the Hastings class of 1953. Always generous with his time and his talent, Justice Manuel was a kind and consistent supporter of the College in a multitude of ways. He served on several boards and committees and was a personal advisor to every Dean since his registration in 1950. In my brief tenure at Hastings, I found his guidance invaluable; and I cherish his friendship. He gave freely of both. All will miss him; but nowhere will the loss be greater than among the students for whom he functioned as a near-perfect role model.

For this reason, Wiley would have been particularly proud of the outcome of this year's Frederick Douglass Moot Court Competition sponsored by the Black American Law Students Association. Held in Los Angeles on Saturday, February 21, the statewide contest yielded to a sweep by the Hastings teams. Michele C. Kibbee and Catalina Lozano won second place in their division for quality of brief. In the other division, Sharon Banks and Fred Hughes were judged best on brief and winners for the overall competition. At press time, Banks and Hughes were scheduled to attend the national finals held March 18-21, accompanied by Professor Wingate, their faculty advisor.

This issue of The Hastings Community is devoted primarily to the budget process of the College and to certain of its fund raising activities. By far the most crucial aspect of our financial well-being is the steady, consistent support received from the Governor and the Legislature in Sacramento. As is discussed more fully elsewhere, Hastings is separately budgeted by the State although it is affiliated with the University of California. This rather unique system has apparently worked well for all concerned. The University is free of direct fiscal responsibility for a bustling institution that is the sole occupant of a small campus, the Governor and the legislators have an opportunity to see in some detail the operations of one of the University's four law schools, and the College receives support for innovations that might otherwise be impossible. Over the past eighteen months, I have learned that the sine qua non for the continuation of this productive arrangement is an attitude and a practice of candor and trust between Hastings and Berkeley and between Hastings and Sacramento; and candor and trust are the cornerstones of policy for the Board and the Administration of the College. In this issue of The Community, you will find many of the key people with whom we work in the State Capitol. They are as important to the College as is any of us here in San Francisco. I have never been given the slightest reason to doubt the integrity or dedication of any of the dozens of people with whom I have worked in the Executive and Legislative Departments. It is they who make possible an open dialogue regarding the needs and concerns of the College and the constraints and priorities of government; and I want to take this opportunity to thank them publicly for their patience and their fairness.

There is growing realization among all Americans that the direct financial participation of government in most aspects of our lives, including higher education, has reached, or is about to reach, definable limits. Hastings must accept this. That we do accept it, and in fact, find it desirable, is evidenced by the programs already underway at the College. Most of our plans for expansion of our facilities and enrichment of our curriculum are independent of state financing. We seek no state aid for the acquisition or completion of the multi-million dollar housing project now underway. We seek no state aid for the physical or programmatic development of the other properties to be utilized for the welfare of our students and our City. We have a Board of Trustees who have accepted responsibility for raising 25 million dollars from the private sector. We have plans for augmenting public appropriation with private endowment for every facet of our operating budget. We expect our alumni to steadily and significantly increase their level and percentage of annual giving to the College. We expect it because it must be. The time of full public subsidy has passed and will not soon return. If we are to survive for the benefit of those unknown young people for whom we are often the only practical access to professional education, we can do so only with the help of those who have been helped. Now is the time of alumni responsibility.

There are many current projects that need your help. The Justice Manuel Memorial Fund is both a lasting tribute to a great man and a perpetual support source for needy students. The James Martin MacInnis Memorial honors a distinguished professional leader and expands the availability of training in the art of advocacy. The Alumni Reception Center drive offers a unique opportunity to participate in building the first physical bond between the alumni and the College. This particular undertaking is of very special interest to me because I see it as a major tool for accelerating the development of private support at Hastings. It is most encouraging to note that we now have six individuals or firms contributing major gifts to be recognized in the special founders section of the dedication piece. They are: Al Abramson, Howard Downs, John Huntington, Jerome Marks, Peter Maier and Yanello & Flippen. We need six additional names in this special section to balance the beautiful casting to be made this summer. Think about it.

"Out of the Ivory Tower"

Externships at Hastings

Students universally decry their educations' failure to prepare them for "the real world." This complaint is more rare at Hastings than at most professional schools, thanks to the College's professional curricula of clinical field work activities. Both students who have decided upon their future field of law and those who want broad exposure to a number of possible legal careers benefit through participation in legal clinics or by clerking for an appellate level court.

Hastings now offers nine separate programs that provide different clerking or clinic level experiences and meet a wide variety of possible career interests.

Professor Thomas H. Rothwell, Director of Clinical Programs, heads the "clearing house" service that works to place Hastings students in clinical field work programs. Other enterprising students devise their own arrangements for "externing," sometimes working for the experience alone, without academic credit.

Hastings will credit students in approved externships with a maximum of 8 units for clinical work; an exception is the 12 units granted those who are chosen for the Appellate or Federal District Court Program. The externs in this program work a maximum of 540 hours in the semester; this time commitment and their minimal cost to the court makes them very useful to the justices.

These students work as law clerks in the United States Courts of Appeals, the U.S. District Courts, the Court of Claims, the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, or with the Supreme Court of Califor-

Professor Thomas Rothwell

More than 350 clinical registrations are arranged by students each year. Most of them will be from the third-year class. Approximately 70% of Hastings students will take part in a clinical program at some point in school.

There were no clinical field work programs at Hastings from 1929 to 1964, and only a few schools were using this augmentation to their academic programs before that time. Hastings was among the Supreme Court Justice Raymond L. Sullivan told The Hastings Community he is "completely enthusiastic about the externship program at Hastings as it exists for the Supreme Court." He agrees with the former students who worked as externs that the experience is invaluable to the student's future career.

David Siegel and Larry Towers are sixth semester Hastings students now working at the Supreme Court. They have a good idea of the competition they overcame to get there. One justice received 300 applicants for 3 extern slots recently. The screening process performed by the Clinical Program Office is helpful when the numbers reach that level. However, individual letters of introduction for applicants are still well received by many justice's offices.

David Siegel and Larry Towers have both accepted jobs as litigators following graduation. They believe their externship with the Supreme Court will be an excellent compromise over being a law clerk for a year; they gain direct experience of the court's side of the legal process but clerk for a shorter time.

The clinics outside the Appellate and Federal District Court Program offer many opportunities for contacts with practicing attorneys. The Civil Justice Clinic has sometimes been a good lead-in for students seeking to work for environmental law firms. This clinic is limited to 24 students each semester and placement is with Bay Area attorneys in both private and public practice.

Externs in the Appellate and Federal Program are not allowed to work for a law firm at the same time due to potential conflict of interest. At the Supreme Court, externs review the records and briefs filed by nia, the California Court of Appeal or other courts of last resort. Hastings places more students in the appellate courts as law clerks than any other law school. Interestingly, sixth semester Hastings students report that Boalt Hall does not allow their students to hold appellate court externships in their last semester.

Students have certain clinical opportunities available in the fourth semester at Hastings, but clerkships in court are limited to fifth and sixth semester students. Hastings programs are supervised by professors or by the practicing attorneys or judges at the field site. Placement may be in a court, a private or public agency, or occasionally a private law firm. The organization, supervision, and reporting requirements tied to Hastings' clinical programs make them superior to those known as "semester away" (sometimes called "faculty abandonment") programs at other schools. Many law schools call certain seminars, legal research and writing courses, and moot court work "clinical programs"; Hastings students take these courses routinely in addition to the professional curriculum. The range of clinical programs available at Hastings is one of the broadest available at any law school.

"It's good to . . . produce something tangible."

first law schools to offer clinical programs; Professor Rothwell has been involved in the program since its inception under the tenure of Dean Sammis in 1964. The program is supervised by the equivalent of six full-time professors who work exclusively on clinical program supervision.

Professor Rothwell stressed the point that students must have substantial initiative to get the most out of a clinical program, but the reward is "transferrable skills" from the clinical experience back to academic courses, and especially to later job situations.

The sequencing of courses as students plan their academic schedules is critical to maximizing clinical opportunities. Two students now working in the late Justice Manuel's offices at the Supreme Court noted they will miss certain recommended "bar courses" in favor of elective course choices and their clinical work. Taking any other electives could leave a student unable to fit in all the basics. With careful planning of priorities, however, a clinical program is a definite enhancement to a students' overall academic schedule.

Students should plan for their clinical experiences prior to the beginning of their third semester. There are recommended pre-clinical courses for the program; Evidence Advocacy or Trial Advocacy Seminar are generally recommended because they provide mock trials. The State Bar and the College permit students in clinical programs to try cases if they are in at least their fourth semester of law school. A course in appellate procedure may be a good selling point for students interviewing for the Appellate Courts program.

The reactions of all who are involved with clinical programs is overwhelmingly enthusiastic. Justice Allison M. Rouse in the Court of Appeal makes himself very accessible to students and genuinely enjoys the interaction with the externs working with his research attorney staff. Former appellate litigants. They write conference memoranda regarding why a hearing should be either granted or denied. These are screened by research attorneys and then sent to the justices for their action.

The working atmosphere at the Supreme Court was highly praised by both students. Larry and David both noted they have "learned to cope with the exigencies of time pressure." Their impression is that Hastings students are better prepared than either externs or new clerks from other top schools to jump right in to the "nuts and bolts" operation.

The California Court of Appeal earned equally high marks for its excellent working atmosphere from two Hastings' alumni; Marisa Battilana, '79 and Morgan Prickett, '80.

Marisa Battilana, now a research attorney for Justice Jerome A. Smith, praised the appellate research staff and credited them with getting her started in a law career she finds very rewarding. She worked as a writ and appeal extern for Justice White during her third year at Hastings. She began working for Justice Smith last March and attributes her employment directly to her good experience as an extern. Now in a position to hire and supervise externs working for the Justice's research staff, Marisa advises students to apply three to four months before the job would begin.

One advantage to the job in appellate research, according to Marisa, is that one is expected to dispassionately think a problem through, figure it out, and "get at the truth." The end result will ideally be a "just position," rather than advocacy of one side or another. She has noticed that people who are perfectionists and enjoy doing very thorough work tend to gravitate to jobs in legal research. Marisa noted that working as an extern was very rewarding because "it's good to find you can apply the skills law school gives you to produce something tangible."

Extern David Siegel researching a case.

Morgan Prickett found, like Marisa Battilana, that he “hugely enjoyed the work” of the Appellate Court when he externed for Justice Rouse. He is now a member of Justice Joseph A. Rattigan’s staff. In hiring a research attorney, it is very important that only minimal training be required; therefore, having worked as an extern is an “enormous asset.” Each Justice varies in his or her own hiring practices, and in the manner his staff is utilized. Morgan Prickett’s advice to students is to write to justices individually regarding an interest in working as an extern. He pinpointed writing ability, and the equally critical ability to interact well with the staff (and be capable of accepting criticism) as the most crucial qualifications for externs in the appellate courts.

The Hastings College of the Law Bulletin contains the guidelines telling how current students should go about applying for the Appellate and Federal District Court Program, and also describes the eight other clinics currently offered through Hastings. These clinical programs include the Civil Justice Clinic, mentioned earlier, where many students try cases before administrative tribunals. The Criminal Justice Clinic offers experience in case investigation, legal research, and litigation, under the supervision of a district attorney, public defender, or judicial office in one of several Bay Area counties. The Hastings Legal Assistance Clinic provides primary legal services to students in several area colleges and universities. The Sex Discrimination Clinic places students with a practicing attorney in the field of women’s rights, in both private and public agencies, for intensive study of legal approaches to this problem.

Some students obtain supervised training in trial court advocacy in addition to clerking. For instance, the Trial Court Program places students as law clerks with a judge of the superior or municipal court, and must follow the completion or concurrent enrollment in a compatible clinic. Another Trial Court Program in the San Francisco city courts places students with judges of the San Francisco Municipal and Superior Courts. They are involved with research and conferences on selected problems in both civil and criminal departments. The final clinic now available, the Trial Practice Clinic, emphasizes first hand experience in advocacy in either a civil or criminal law setting, or both. Students are routinely appointed clerks to U.S. Magistrates and in that capacity provide representation in petty offense cases when there is no appearance by counsel. They also serve as law clerks on U.S. District Court law and motion calendars.

The Hastings clinics all vary in the time commitment required and the units granted according to the needs of the agencies or law firms involved. Alumni who are interested in learning more about the clinical programs and may want to consider extern placements in their firm or agency, are invited to call Professor Rothwell or write to the Office of Clinical Programs at Hastings College of the Law, 198 McAllister Street, San Francisco, CA 94102. Professor Rothwell will explain the two basic types of field work supervision plans; one with the professor as supervisor, the other giving that responsibility to the externship site.

Current students would be well advised to take advantage of one of the clinical field programs available to them. Whether clerking, gaining experience in litigation, or providing legal services through an agency, the “heavy dose of reality” has done no harm to Hastings students, and has often done them a great deal of good.

FACULTY

Faculty View

The Process of Law School

How bright eyed and apprehensive most of them are, those incoming students fresh from colleges, careers, and child raising. The opportunity before them is exciting, the excitement only slightly dampened by the skeptical words of second year students and the warnings of hard work to come. How bright eyed and apprehensive are those same men and women as they march through the commencement line? What happens to them in three years? Was it supposed to happen?

The incoming students suspect they are going to be transformed, but it soon appears that they are to learn a great deal about assault, formation of contracts, estates in land, the insanity defense and personal jurisdiction—and so much more. There is the whole library. Impossible. So get out those horn-books, outlines, and nutshells, all comforting because they put book covers on a legal subject.

Meanwhile, some professors are playing mind-teasing games. Following the trauma of first year exams come more subjects, separated by course titles, together with involvement in the “real” world; the good cause, moot court, journal writing, a part time job, a clinic or an externship. Still there are more examinations to be taken. And still some professors playing those tiresome mind-teasing games.

What have those professors been doing? Where did their games fit in the three year plan? What plan? Only three years of courses and some experience. A few students and faculty seem as fascinated with the educational process as with the subject. For such students, their self-consciousness manifests itself in often serious gripes about what is being done to them and what they are being “forced” to do to themselves. For such faculty, questions concerning process are suspect in their colleagues’ eyes—serious questions but not central questions. Both such students and such faculty, however, are wary of self-indulgence: to look at the educational process too long is to look at one’s own doing, which can quickly get very fuzzy and even crippling.

So on balance, why not continue the focus on subject matter and let the process take place as it will? This could be the conscious choice, but it should not be the choice by default; lest we all suspect that we are not serious about our business.

Subject matter. Educational process. Is there not a third way? Is there not a way to keep our eye on the personal interaction between a trusting student and a trustworthy professor? For starters, I propose that we professors make ourselves more worthy of trust by individually and collectively choosing an educational process and making that choice manifest. We could have bright eyed and apprehensive graduates who in addition are appreciative, for they shall have been done unto consciously as well as in good faith.

Associate Professor Thomas R. Kerr

Thomas R. Kerr received his A.B. in 1951 from the University of North Carolina and his J.D. in 1954 from Yale. After a Navy tour he practiced law in San Francisco before becoming an Assistant Professor at Berkeley in the Rhetoric Department. He came to Hastings in 1972 as director of Legal Writing and Research, served as Assistant Dean in 1974-75 and was made full Professor in 1980. He teaches Contracts, Agency and Partnership, and Admiralty.

FACULTY NOTES

Professor Wayne Brazil has had several articles accepted for publication. They include: Civil Discovery: How Bad Are the Problems Which Plague It? 67 A.B.A.J. (April, 1981); Social Forces and Sectional Self-Scrutiny, 2 Social Science Perspectives on the South (1981); The Country Life Movement, Rural Sociology (March, 1981); Howard Odum and the Philosophy of Country Life, Rural Sociology (September, 1981). The American Bar Association's Center for Professional Responsibility has selected an article by Professor Brazil for republication in its Monograph Series: Problems in Professional Responsibility (the article is entitled Surprise Testimonial Fraud by Clients: How Should Counsel Respond?).

Professor Brazil presented a paper to a Judicial/Faculty Colloquium at Hastings on February 26, 1981. He reported the principal findings from the empirical study of discovery abuse he has been directing under the sponsorship of the American Bar Foundation. The New England School of Law has invited Professor Brazil to make a similar presentation during its spring conference on law reform.

Professor James R. McCall's latest book, The Sum and Substance of Antitrust, was published in October, 1980, by the Center for Creative Educational Services. Professor McCall is on sabbatical leave during the Spring, 1981 semester, working on a biography of Emeritus Professor Roger J. Traynor, former Chief Justice of the California Supreme Court. During the month of March, 1981, Professor McCall will be a Visiting Professor of Law at Nihon University in Tokyo, Japan, lecturing on American antitrust law.

Professor Raymond L. Ocampo, Jr., who directs the Legal Writing and Research Program and teaches an Evidence/Advocacy seminar and a Professional Responsibility course at Hastings, is now a partner in the firm of Ocampo, Millner & McGee, San Francisco. Mr. Ocampo recently founded the Filipino Bar Association of Northern California and is a member of the Association's Board of Governors.

Adjunct Professor Joseph W. Rogers, Jr., has been honored by the American Board of Trial Advocates as the Trial Lawyer of the Year.

Rogers is a senior partner in the law firm of Petit and Martin. He is a member of the International Association of Insurance Counsel, the International Academy of Trial Lawyers and the American College of Trial Attorneys. He is a Past President of the Northern California Association of Defense Attorneys.

Professor Rudolf B. Schlesinger gave a talk on “Comparative Criminal Procedure” which was attended by members of the Hastings faculty and by judges of the California Supreme Court and Appellate Courts.

December 6, 1980, Schlesinger attended a meeting of the International Child Abduction Study Group of the U.S. Secretary of State's Advisory Committee on Private International Law.

At the present time he is preparing the entry on “Civil Law” which will appear in Funk & Wagnall's New Encyclopedia.

Professor Kevin Tierney has been elected a member of the American Law Institute. The Institute, founded in 1923, has as its object “the clarification and simplification of the law and its better adaptation to social needs, to secure the better administration of justice and to carry on scholarly and scientific legal work”. Its best-known publications are the Restatements of all the major branches of law, which are widely used throughout the United States, but nowhere as much as in the California Courts with a total of 5,044 citations in reported opinions up to March 31, 1980. This total exceeds by nearly a thousand citations the next most frequently citing state, Pennsylvania.

By his election, Professor Tierney has become the 1758th member of the Institute, which deliberately restricts its membership to a carefully selected group of specialists in particular branches of law. He expects his major contributions to the Institute's work to be in the fields he teaches — namely, Contracts, Conflict of Laws and Criminal Law. He expects to attend the Institute's Annual Meeting to be held in Philadelphia in May.

Adjunct Professor e. robert (bob) wallach was honored by the American Jewish Congress for his contribution to the legal and civic communities. He is a founder of the Hastings Center for Trial and Appellate Advocacy, served as President of the Bar Association of San Francisco in 1975 and was first head of Legal Services for Children. His pro bono activities include serving as counsel to Public Advocates, Inc., the Youth Law Center, Consumers Union and California Rural Legal Assistance Foundation.

Wallach also served on President Reagan's Administration of Justice Advisory Committee.

BUDGET - THE PLAYERS

HASTINGS

Dean Bert S. Prunty is the chief decision maker. Although relatively new to California, his involvement with negotiating the 1980-81 budget and key legislation which restructured the Board of Directors has made him a familiar sight in Sacramento with both the Governor and the Legislature.

Academic Dean Barbara Caulfield is responsible for recommending budget changes to the Dean for all academic programs, including the library. She is also playing a key role in justifying Hastings' budget to the State.

Milton von Damm, Director of Administration, came to Hastings in May of

Dean Bert S. Prunty

1980 from systemwide administration of the University of California, where, for over 12 years, he coordinated the negotiation of the University of California's operating budget for the nine campus system with the Governor's Department of Finance, the Legislative Analyst's Office and the staff of Legislative fiscal committees. He is responsible for the actual development and justification of Hastings' budget.

Jack Padilla, Budget Officer, was Hastings' Personnel Officer for four and a half years and is now a key figure in the preparation of all budget documents.

THE PROCESS

The budget process at Hastings is a complex, year-long course of planning, coordination and adjustment, beginning in the various departments of the law school, moving to the State Capitol for analysis, scrutiny and perhaps reduction, and returning, months later, in the form of a Legislative appropriation. This article is the saga of the budget from inception to reality.

The end of the state surplus which has until now cushioned Proposition 13's impact, and recession-lessened current state tax revenues point to a very lean state budget, an unfortunate prospect for Hastings, whose fiscal needs now include support for the new academic building and concomitant services. Given these circumstances and due to an administrative reorganization, Dean Bert Prunty felt the time had come for department heads to review how existing functions were performed and whether they could or should be altered or abolished.

As a result, Hastings now has a system of decentralized budget management, with more active participation from department heads in the area of need analysis, and, eventually, more department flexibility for utilizing and living within departmental budget allocations. The full implementation of a participatory rather than a highly centralized budget development and resource management capacity requires new accounting systems, budget structures and processes, management information, and reports. Such a new budget structure and process was introduced in early Fall, 1980.

The initial step in the new budget system is for each manager of an organizational unit to prepare a budget request during the summer. These requests are submitted to the appropriate executive responsible for academic affairs, administration, student services, or development. These executives screen issues, propose priorities, and prepare justifications and alternate ways of achieving the same goal whenever a new program, modification to existing program, or budget base increase is proposed. This information is coordinated by the Director of Administration and submitted to Dean Prunty, who meets with each executive to discuss the proposals and priorities of each department. He then carefully weighs internal and external considerations and decides what to include in a budget request to the state.

By early September, Hastings' budget request, after review by Hastings' Board of Directors, is sent to the State Department of Finance, which has the responsibility to prepare for the Governor the budget he will submit to the Legislature. Department of Finance staff establish a base budget—funds needed to maintain operations at a status quo level—and evaluate all proposed policy issues, such as items which expand existing programs or create new ones.

Strict guidelines from the Director of the Department of Finance, Mary Ann Graves, recognized that the 1981-82 Fiscal Year will be the first year since passage of Proposition 13 that the state will not have a surplus to help balance the budget. Hastings Director of Administration, Milton von Damm, and Mr. Dean Miller of the Department of Finance first negotiated how large a state appropriation, exclusive of salary increases, was needed to maintain a status quo, or "base budget." Agreement was reached on a figure of $6,959,000, a $159,000 increase over the $6,800,000 1980-81 appropriation.

Then negotiations, headed by Dean Prunty, began for ten policy issue proposals, including a $1.4 million request, mostly for a one-time library acquisition effort; $408,000 for a new law clinic to supplement student classroom instruction; and $500,000 for eight other proposals for various high priority needs, such as student health, security, the Legal Education Opportunity Program, and others. The Department of Finance was sympathetic to many of Hastings' requests, but the state's fiscal condition is so poor, that not all of the requests could be funded.

Approved requests include:

Library Acquisitions and Staff	$372,059
LEOP	25,550
Student Health	42,185
Security Staff	65,471

Total $505,265

From mid-November to early December, the Governor reviews the recommendations of the Finance Department, and in January, when the Legislature convenes, the Governor addresses the two houses. On January 9, 1981, Governor Brown's "State of the State" message painted a broad outline of his $24.6 billion budget—which allows for a mere 1.5% overall increase—and spoke of the "painful choices" that budget decisions require.

The Governor's budget bill includes $7,438,485 for Hastings College of the Law—funds sufficient not only to continue providing instruction at present levels for the law school's 1500 students, but also to increase LEOP services, to improve student health and campus security, and to increase, substantially, the law library's collection and technical services. Proposed out-of-state fee increases will reduce the law school's demands on the state by approximately $36,000.

What is the fate of the Governor's budget bill? For fiscal year 1981-82, the question remains open. The budget goes simultaneously to the Senate's Finance Committee and the Assembly's Ways and Means Committee, where Hastings' portion is referred to the respective committees' higher education subcommittees. These subcommittees are currently awaiting the report of the Legislative Analyst—an office which functions for the Legislature as the Department of Finance does for the executive branch. The Legislative Analyst prepares and publishes a substantive analysis of the Governor's budget. In subcommittee, Hastings' appropriation can be diminished or enhanced. Each legislative body modifies the Governor's budget bill as they see fit and produces an amended version. The two versions are reconciled by a bi-cameral conference committee, comprised of three members each from the Senate and Assembly subcommittees and returned to both houses for approval and passage. The Legislature's budget then returns to the Governor's desk. The Governor, facing a deadline of July 1, has the option of line item veto—that is, he can delete or decrease, but in no other way change, any appropriation—or approve, intact, the budget. Thus, nearly a year after department managers begin to assess and project their needs, their budget requests return to them—fully or partly realized—in the form of legislative appropriation.

James Martin MacInnis Memorial

The James Martin MacInnis Memorial was established to honor one of San Francisco's best known and beloved lawyers. Funds, donated by his friends, will be used to establish both a new Moot Courtroom at Hastings which will be known as "The MacInnis Memorial Moot Courtroom," and a scholarship fund for the College of Advocacy.

The dedication date for the MacInnis Memorial has not yet been set; however, a bronze plaque, sculpted by Spiro Anargyros in a likeness of Mr. MacInnis, is progressing toward completion. This plaque will list the friends of Mr. MacInnis. A larger-than-life oil painting of Mr. MacInnis, painted by his friend and artist, Cynthia Meyer, will also be displayed in the new Moot Courtroom.

Donations, which already total $37,335, may still be made to this memorial. They should be directed to Hastings College of the Law, 198 McAllister Street, San Francisco, CA 94102.

Alumnus Brown Elected Speaker

Assembly Speaker Willie Brown

On December 1, 1981, the State Assembly elected Willie L. Brown, Jr. to become its Speaker. His election capped a fifteen year career in the Assembly which has seen him introduce a broad spectrum of progressive legislation.

The San Francisco Democrat was born in 1934 in Mineloa, Texas into a poor, rural family. After working his way through San Francisco State University, Brown was admitted to Hastings and graduated in 1958 as class president. He worked his way through Hastings by doing janitorial work for the school.

Brown has practiced as a tax expert since 1959 and has served as a member of the State Assembly representing San Francisco's 17th District since 1965. He is chairman of the Legislative Black Caucus and of the Black American Political Association of California. In 1972 and 1980 he co-chaired the California delegations to the Democratic National Convention.

"I received my learning habits and discipline at Hastings, which clearly helped shape my career," he told The Community.

Brown never imagined, as a student, that he might become one of Hastings' most distinguished alumni. "As a student, my thoughts were on getting out... only," he said.

Brown recalled two of his professors at Hastings as having influenced him most—Everett Fraser, the distinguished 65 Club professor, and David Snodgrass, Hastings' Dean from 1940 to 1963.

We asked Brown whether he felt that law was the only career for those who are interested in bringing about social change.

"Law," he said, "can be the avenue one uses for social change, however it should not be assumed that a legal career is the career for social change."

Brown has, nonetheless, become one of California's most dedicated and active public servants, with a long list of speaking engagements and community and political board memberships to his credit. He has consistently won re-election with more than sixty percent of the vote and has authored over one hundred and forty of California's laws.

At the start of the 1980 legislative session, he was named Majority Floor Leader. He is a member of the Assembly Judiciary and Criminal Justice Committees. From 1976 through 1979 Brown was chairman of the Assembly Revenue and Taxation Committee and from 1971-74 he chaired the powerful Ways and Means Committee.

In Memoriam

The Hastings community was saddened early this year by the death of Associate Justice Wiley W. Manuel, Hastings '53. Justice Manuel died on January 5, 1981 following a short illness. Well known as a soft spoken, scholarly and diligent jurist, his death from cancer at age 53 is a tremendous loss to his family, his many friends and associates, and to California's judiciary system.

Justice Manuel has served on the California Supreme Court for nearly four years; he was the ninth graduate of Hastings College of the Law to hold the honor.

While at Hastings, Justice Manuel was Editor-in-Chief of The Hastings Law Journal, a member of Order of the Coif, and a member of the Thurston Society. Military veteran benefits helped him finance law school. Manuel was first in his class for his first two years at Hastings; the added responsibilities of the Law Journal caused him to "slip" to second. Two weeks after graduation he was hired by Edmund (Pat) Brown, Sr., then State Attorney General. His son, Governor Jerry Brown, appointed Manuel to the Supreme Court 23 years later.

Wiley Manuel was born in Oakland in 1927 and moved to Berkeley with his parents before starting school. His father, a dining car porter, and his mother, a domestic servant, were originally from New Orleans. He always attributed his success to the encouragement and support he received from his family. His undergraduate degree from the University of California at Berkeley was earned while he worked as a hospital orderly.

As statewide head of the Administrative Law Section in the Attorney General's Office, Justice Manuel gained recognition for his expert handling of civil law matters for the State and its agencies. He also earned the friendship and respect of both co-workers and adversaries. He was appointed to the Alameda Superior Court by Governor Brown in 1976 after rising to the position of Chief Assistant Attorney General. He served there for just over one year before his appointment to the Supreme Court as Associate Justice.

Wiley Manuel was also deeply involved with his church and numerous civic organizations. He was a lector and lay minister of communion at St. Paschal's Catholic Church in Oakland. He was a member of the Knights of Columbus Council 1499 in Berkeley, and the Rooney (Serra) Assembly in Oakland. He had been a member of the Governor's Task Force on Consumer Fraud in 1971 and served as Chairman, Board of Review and Assistant Scoutmaster for the Boy Scouts of America in Oakland.

Other committee memberships included the Judicial Council of California, the California Conference of Judges (Appellate Courts Committee), and past President of the Charles Houston Bar Association, Alameda County. He also served on the Sentencing Advisory Committee to the Judicial Council from 1976-78.

Attorney General George Deukmejian said of Wiley Manuel, "He consistently reflected a balanced perspective—a judge on whom convenient labels could not be placed." Justice Manuel's court record and his personal convictions defied traditional categories; he often provided the "swing vote" to affect a majority for both the liberal and conservative wings of the court. Despite his record as a staunch defender of civil rights, he was often aligned with the prosecutor in law enforcement cases. His vote to uphold the death penalty gave the court its 4-3 majority on that issue.

The inability of others to find a label for Justice Manuel was probably agreeable to him; he disliked labeling individuals and being identified himself as "the black member" of the Supreme Court. He often quoted abolitionist Frederick Douglass, who said "Before the law, there should be no rich, no poor... no black, no white." Nevertheless, he was aware of his importance as a role model. He once said, "It may make a difference to a kid in Hunters Point or a kid in the Mission to know that I am black." He told Examiner reporter K. Connie Kang, "I hope I'm a model for all kinds of Americans—black, Chicanos, native Americans, Asian-Americans—who have to work their way up. A part of the problem for minorities is arriving at that point where they feel 'this is my society, too. I can do as good a job as anybody else.'"

San Francisco Superior Court Judge Harry W. Low, a long time friend of Justice Manuel's, paid a final tribute as he adjourned court on January 5, saying, "We will all miss him very much. He was a fine judge because he had an instinct for common sense. He was fair, he was charitable, he was compassionate—the very personification of the word 'gentleman.' He served the State very well in many capacities. That he was a distinguished Black leader makes his death an even more tragic loss."

Wiley W. Manuel Scholarship Fund Established

The memory of a fine man and a scholar will be preserved at Hastings College of the Law through the Wiley W. Manuel Scholarship Fund. Justice Manuel had retained close ties with the College, serving on the Board of Trustees of the Hastings Law Center Foundation and on the Board of the Hastings Center for Trial and Appellate Advocacy, and he had been generous with his time making numerous addresses to Hastings alumni gatherings throughout California. Following his death, Mrs. Manuel requested that a fitting memorial would be the establishment of a scholarship fund at Hastings.

The extent of affection and respect felt for Wiley Manuel is evidenced by the broad spectrum of support already shown for the Fund. Over one hundred gifts, ranging from $1.00 to $500, and totaling more than $8,000 were received in the first month following the Justice's death, and the Fund now stands at $10,022.

To insure that the Wiley W. Manuel Scholarship Fund will have a significant impact in helping future students, a committee has been formed to assist in raising funds to meet a minimum goal of $25,000. A partial list of committee members includes:

Richard D. Bridgman	Michael R. Marron
Allen E. Broussard	Carl B. Metoyer '52
Charles Hoge '53	John T. Racanelli '52
Daniel Johnson, Jr.	Clayton P. Roche
John J. Klee, Jr.	Michael Traynor
Donald Maffly

From the Fund, yearly scholarships will be awarded to financially needy students, based primarily on scholastic achievement. The amount and number of awards will be determined by the amount of the corpus of the Fund.

To paraphrase California Supreme Court Justice Rose Bird from remarks given at a memorial service at the Court, Wiley was taken from us before he had a chance to make a major impact on California law from the bench. Justice Frank Newman said, "Wiley had a distinguished career under so many Attorneys General that he was our in-house expert on legal problems in the State. The tragedy is that the people of California are to be denied his continuing contributions." In his years of hard work and dedication to the law, through his service to the public in the Attorney General's Office, Wiley Manuel was responsible for a substantial amount of the civil law matters of the State and its agencies.

Now, even though he is no longer present, he will continue to have an effect on the future of the law through the generosity of those who knew him or support excellence in the law. If you wish to join in this tribute to Justice Manuel, your tax deductible contribution to the Fund should be sent to:

ALUMNI

Minority Recruitment Program Launched

On January 14, 1981, Dean Bert Prunty launched Hastings' Alumni Minority Recruitment Program at a luncheon attended by eight alumni who showed enthusiastic support for the effort. The program aims to increase the number of minority applications and enrollments at Hastings through a system of personalized contacts with those who have expressed an interest in law school.

Carl L. Williams, Executive Director of the San Francisco City and County Housing Authority agreed to serve as Chairman of the Advisory Committee. Calling the program "an opportunity to assist in the efforts of the administration to promote and advance legal educational opportunities for minorities", he said it is "incumbent upon minority alumni to do whatever they can to assure that the gains that were made which enabled us to attend and graduate from Hastings continue and increase without interruption".

Dean Prunty pointed out that the number of minority law school applicants is declining nationally and this is an effort to attack this problem. He emphasized that the Hastings administration is irrevocably committed to a strong recruitment and support system for qualified minority students; and he stated his belief that alumni can be a key factor in that effort. Under the program, prospective Hastings students will be contacted personally by an alumnus. Information will be distributed by phone, at meetings and in connection with activities sponsored by local bar associations. Counseling will be aimed at the encouragement and guidance of those offered admission to Hastings.

Hastings minority alumni attending the luncheon will serve as the Advisory Committee to the Program. Those present were: Judge Raymond Arata, Jr., San Francisco; Bob Gonzales, San Francisco; Clifford S. Lau, San Francisco; Lester Marston, Ukiah; Hiram E. Smith, San Francisco; Dennis Weaver, San Francisco; and Pam Williams, Ukiah.

Judges Edward Kakita of Los Angeles and Henry Sanders Mims of Huntsville, Alabama, as well as Howard K. Watkins of Fresno, sent telegrams of support and have agreed to serve as members of the Advisory Committee.

Hastings' Director of Admissions, Janis Boster, spoke at the luncheon. "Nothing can speak as positively of the strengths and merits of a law school as its alumni, and nothing is more impressive and helpful to a law school applicant than personal attention from an alumnus," she said.

Carl L. Williams, '73

Other speakers included Bernadette Hartfield, Director of the Legal Educational Opportunity Program, who stressed the importance of not only actively recruiting minority students but also helping them successfully complete their studies and pass the bar. The L.E.O. Program at Hastings is being augmented to provide greater support in this area.

Academic Dean Barbara Caulfield has assigned a staff member, Sallie Melendez, to act as her liaison. Inquiries and volunteers may contact her at 557-8513.

Alumni to Counsel Students

The Alumni Association and the Placement Office are sponsoring a Student Placement Counseling Program which will assist students in receiving information regarding the practice of law in particular specialty and geographic areas of interest. The program is designed to help students evaluate their career goals and develop options. The participating alumni will serve as a valuable resource for the students to inquire about, for instance, practicing tax law in San Diego or labor law in Sacramento. You, the alumni, know your communities and can be of great assistance to the student who is trying to make career decisions with often limited information.

The Alumni Office has mailed a letter to you explaining this exciting program and encouraging your participation. If you did not receive a letter, please call the Alumni Office at (415) 557-3571. Your completed form should be returned to the Placement Office.

Solo Practitioners Find Safety in Numbers

A Solo Practitioners' Committee was formed in the autumn of 1980, within the framework of the San Francisco Bar Association Barristers' Club, under the energetic, enterprising and inimitable chairmanship of Charles E. Harris '76.

The Committee, with membership totaling 90 plus, has become a most welcome forum for the exchange of ideas among solo practitioners. In particular, the more novice among us have been given the benefit of the experience of the more established by means of informal brown-bag luncheon discussions. We have had the honor of hearing Judge Donald Constine '48 speak to the Committee on the administration of justice and we have gained knowledge of the utility of computer time-sharing and electronic word processing. Ms. Sonja Kuburovich Taffen of Spector Liebowitz & Co. addressed the Committee on March 5 about the preparation of tax returns for the solo practitioner.

All similarly situated members of the Bar are, of course, welcome to join us. Please contact Ms. Guity Deyhimy '78 at 421-5464 for further information.

"Funding Hits Halfway Mark" Alumni Center Drive Progresses

Professor Jerome Marks '64 reports that gifts and pledges to the Hastings Alumni Reception Center have passed the half-way point. Marks, chairman of the drive to raise $200,000 said, "On behalf of the College, I wish to express my deepest thanks to the alumni, parents and friends who have shown their support in the early stages of this effort. The completion of this facility will have a major impact at the College, both in terms of reducing the costs of school events and in our ability to raise significant funds from the corporate sector."

As The Hastings Community goes to press, we wish to thank the following persons who have contributed or pledged funds totalling $135,000 to the Center.
